NATHANIEL P. BANKS.

A DISTINGUISHED UNION GENERAL DIED YESTERDAY.

An Honorably Record as Soldier and Statesman—Several Times Governor and Congressman Public Honors Testly to the Esteem He Possessed.

Waltham, Mass., Sept. 1.—General Nathaniel Banks, soldier and statesman, died at his home in this city shortly before 8 o'clock this morning from brain trouble after a long illness. For nearly two years the General has been suffering but he was not taken seriously ill until two weeks ago.

Early this summer he began to fail mentally and was taken to the home of his daughter, the wife of the Rev. Paul Sterling, at Mount Deer Isle, Me., for the summer. Three weeks ago his condition became more serious and he was brought to his home here. He grew worse, and he was then taken to the McLean asylum at Somerville. He succumbed rapidly, and when he could not recognize members of his family it was decided by the physicians that nothing could be done for him and yesterday he was conveyed to his home once more.

He began to sink rapidly, and at 6 o'clock last evening it was evident that the end was fast approaching. Mrs. Banks, with the General's daughter, Maud, and his niece, Miss Sybie Banks, were at his bedside constantly until his death.

At midnight the General became unconscious, and he slowly lost his strength until the hour of his death. The end came very quietly, and those gathered about the dying General were hardly aware when he passed away.

With Public Honors.

On the announcement of General Bankss death the flags of the public buildings in the city were displayed at half mast, and on every side evidence of the respect in which the General is held is conspicuous. The funeral will take place Tuesday afternoon under the direction of Mayor Warden and Colonel Ephraim Stevens. On Monday afternoon the body will be escorted to Ashbury Temple by a detail of the G. A. R., where it will lie in state Monday evening. On Tuesday afternoon at 1:45 brief services will be held at the residence, after which the body will be again borne to Ashbury Temple, where the public services will be held.

Distinguished Services.

Nathaniel P. Banks of Waltham was born at Waltham, Mass., Jan. 30, 1801, was educated in the public schools; worked in a factory, edited a newspaper, studied law; was a member of the legislature in 1849, '50, '51 and '52, and served two years as Speaker; was elected to the State Senate in 1851, but being a member of the House, declined; was a member of the constitutional convention in 1853, and served as president of that body; held the office of Governor in 1858, '59 and '60; was commissioned a major-general of volunteers and served throughout the war for the Union; was elected to the Thirty-third, Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth congresses, and resigned his seat Jan. 1, 1853, to fill the office of Governor; served as Speaker in the Thirty-fourth Congress; was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress for the unexpired term of D. W. Gooch, resigned; was elected to the Fortieth, Forty-first, Forty-second, Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses; was appointed United States Marshal March 11, 1889, and served until April 23, 1888; was elected to the Fifty-first Congress as a Republican, receiving 14,899 votes, against 13,465 votes for Thomas Wentworth Higginson, (Dem.), 424 votes for Edward Kendall, (Pro.), and 20 votes scattering.

MORTON ACCEPTS.

He Will Be a Candidate for Governor of New York.

Rhine Cliff, N. Y., Sept. 1.—The following letter explains itself:

"Ellerslie, Rhine Cliff-on-the-Hudson, Aug. 31, 1894.—In response to the very large number of suggestions made to me that I should declare my attitude with reference to the Republican State convention, I address myself to the Republicans of the State of New York, and beg to say that while the suggestions are, in themselves, unusual, I venture to express the hope the urgency in the public journals for the announcement of my decision was not occasioned by any undue hesitation on my part.

"I am certainly not seeking any nomination from the convention. I have been absent from the country so long, and so far away, that no one can refer to the slightest movement on my part to cause a decision in which my name has been used with the names of other Republicans who are deservedly honored throughout the State for their services and character. I have put myself in nobody's way nor have I suffered anyone to do that for me which I disclaim for myself.

"And, now, having been five days on American soil, after 12 months' absence, and having examined the situation as well as possible in that period, I beg to say that in the approaching councils of the party in convention assembled, I desire to be regarded as a soldier in the Republican army, ready to receive the commands of my fellow-citizens of like persuasion in public policy, with myself, whether those commands involve leadership or service in the ranks.

"When I left the Vice-President's chair, and since, I have had no thought, much less desire, to re-enter public life. Manifold considerations regarding my family, which I have no right to obtrude upon the public, led me to desire to spend the remainder of my days in retirement.

"By the kindness of my countrymen, having held high official positions at home and abroad, I am profoundly content to let the record stand.

"But, do not understand me to imply that I look lightly upon the office of Governor of the State of New York. I know something of the resources, the capacities and the needs of the Empire State, and I appreciate the importance, the usefulness and the honor of the great office of the chief executive. Should I be called to fill it I shall strive earnestly to serve the people with steadfastness of purpose, and to faithfully administer a public trust.

"Finally, I aver in the sincerest terms, if the convention shall prefer to use any other name than mine upon the Republican banner, I shall accept the result without regret or sense of injury and will give to the successful candidate my hearty and unwavering support.

"Trusting the action of the convention will be harmonious and redound to the best interests of the party and State, I remain, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,
LEVI P. MORTON.

A GREAT BRIDGE.

Report on the New Hudson River Suspension Bridge.

New York, Sept. 1.—A dispatch from Washington says that the Board of Engineers appointed to report on the proposed Hudson River bridge have declared in favor of a suspension bridge, with length of span 2900 feet, as the safest and most practical for a railroad bridge between New Jersey and New York city.

It is impossible to get any of the details of the board's report, but it was said today by an official of the War department that the board had accepted the lowest limit for the length of the span allowed by the act authorizing the construction of the bridge, namely 2800 feet, and that it favors a suspension bridge. Secretary Lamont himself declines to make the report public. "I desire to first consult with the chief of engineers, General Casey, about the matter," he said "and when I have approved or otherwise disposed of the recommendation of the board I shall then be glad to give the report in full. The report is a lengthy one and some little time must necessarily elapse before I shall be able to fully consider and act upon it." There is a suspicion around the War department that the Secretary, acting under the expert advice of General Casey, is not altogether satisfied with the board's recommendation in regard to the length of span. General Casey, as is well known, has always favored a longer span so as to bring the piers nearer shore.

An Interview With Corbett.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 1.—James J. Corbett was interviewed to-day relative to the deposit of certified checks of the Sioux City club with a New York newspaper. "Will I meet Peter Jackson?" said he, "Of course I will. What is wanted is the tangible articles of agreement. If they ever are signed, then we can make some headway. Until that is done, we are still at odds. I would suggest that the Sioux City club send a man East at once with such articles as the club may wish to have signed and, whatever they may be, I will accept. You can tell Jackson's representatives that I will not only accept the terms and conditions of the Sioux City club, but more I will make side bets to any amount with Jackson that I will whip him." "I expect that this will nail Jackson down to a fight?" "Not much, I don't believe he will ever face me in the ring. He will have another excuse to offer."

A Plea for Annexation.

London, Sept. 1.—The Daily News correspondent in Berlin says: "The last mail from Samoa brings a petition to the Emperor for annexation. Among the 62 signers are two Englishmen and one American. The German warship Falke has been at Berkunanico. The officers visited the fort and the rebels cordially received them. The young Tamasese, son of Germany's former protege, has joined the rebels. The confusion of the government troops is constantly growing.

He is a Republican.

Lexington, Ky., Sept. 1. Colonel O. C. Bowles of Pike: Pike county, a leading Democrat of the mountain region of Kentucky, has announced he will hereafter affiliate with the Republicans. His section is largely interested in lumber, coal and iron and he takes issue with his old party on its tariff policy towards these products.

"A Prominent Intellectual Part."

They are rehearsing Mr. Hoyt's new play, "A Black-Sheep," at the Madison Square theater, New York. A lively young miss, who was engaged and was promised a prominent intellectual part in the play, got her lines and took them home to study them.

The next day, with her hair awry and her cheeks blazing, she sought Mr. Hoyt in his sanctum.

"I thought you promised me a prominent intellectual part!" said the young woman to the playwright.

"Well," said Mr. Hoyt, arching his eyebrows interrogatively, "that's what you've got."

"Oh, it is!" said the young woman, trying to be sarcastic. "Just read this." Then she pointed to her part. "On such and such a page you come in." "After this line, by such and such a one, you go off." "Where is the prominent intellectual part about this?" she said in wearied tones.

"Why, my dear," said Mr Hoyt plaintively, "that's the best thinking part in the whole play. I know, because I wrote it myself." Then he fled the apartment. Strangely enough, the young woman has not yet resigned.

COLORADO SPRINGS LYCEUM.

A Course of Popular Lectures Already Arranged.

It is with renewed pleasure that the Rocky Mountain Lyceum bureau calls attention to the merits of the Colorado Springs lyceum. As promised last year, the coming season will add music to eloquence. Eight engagements have been made for the season of 1894-95. The talent secured is second to none on the platform of to-day.

Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols of Indianapolis, Ind., will appear in an illustrated lecture on "The White City by the Lake." She has been received with enthusiasm in Paris, Belgium, Holland, England and Canada. Her word painting presents pictures more vivid than those on the screen. Her stereopticon views are unsurpassed.

Hon. John Temple Graves of Atlanta, Ga., is one of the ripest statesmen and thinkers of the present age. His "Solution of the Negro Problem" is the topic of the hour: the most striking and sensational utterance made on the platform in years. Mr. Graves will give us a prelude this year on "The Great West."

Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, pastor of Plymouth Church, Chicago, and president of Armour Institute, is the most brilliant pulpit orator west of New England. His reputation has spread to the uttermost limits of the country. During the World's Fair, thousands sought in vain for standing room in his church. Eminent men consider his oration on "A Chapter in the History of Liberty," the finest specimen of eloquence heard in this generation.

Dr. A. A. Willits, of the Third Street Presbyterian Church, Dayton, O., has stood for years in the very front rank of pulpit orators. His celebrated lecture, "Sunshine, or How to Enjoy Life," has been called for again and again. It has been delivered three successive seasons in the same city. Each time the genial preacher received a perfect ovation.

Russell H. Conwell, pastor of the Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, and president of Temple College, was long associated on the lecture platform with Wendell Phillips, John B. Gough and Henry Ward Beecher. He is the only orator in America who can fill a hall in Philadelphia with 2000 people at a dollar a ticket. His "Life of Spurgeon" reached the sale of 127,000 copies in four months. The Temple Baptist Church will seat over 4000 people; thousands are often turned away. No lecture of our time is more elevating than "Acres of Diamonds, or Where to Get Rich and Become Great."

Dr. James Hedley of Cleveland, O., has been prominent on the platform for 14 years. His inimitable lecture, "Wanted—A Man," is a favorite wherever the speaker appears.

Mozart Symphony club of New York is composed of six representative instrumentalists and vocalists. It is the most popular high class concert company in America. Every number on the programme is a gem, and every performer an artist. A transcontinental tour will be made in March, 1895.

Hon. George R. Wendling, the eminent lawyer and author of Washington, D. C., made a record of 120 nights upon the platform the first five months of his career as an orator, and 1400 nights in the eight following years. Over 5000 journals praise him as the "Prince of Orators." His "Saul of Tarsus," a discussion of orators and oratory, is one of the really great lectures of the American platform.

The first lecture of the course will be the evening of Nov. 1. The price of season—tickets is $2. Single admission 50 cents. It will be seen that the purchase of a season ticket gives one an opportunity to hear the distinguished orators of this nation for 25 cents a lecture.

The triumphs of the orator lie, not only in himself, but in the inspiration which comes from an immense audience. Such triumphs, in addition to entertainment, and recreation, touch the springs of public opinion, strengthen the public feeling, arouse the public conscience, and ennoble the public mind.

To create these triumphs in the new West is the purpose of the Rocky Mountain Lyceum bureau.

SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY

Medical Schools.—Lowering of the standard of medical education in the United States, according to Dr. William Pepper of the University of Pennsylvania, is a result of the reckless distribution by State legislatures of charters and degree-conferring privileges to new and imperfectly-equipped schools. In the 12 years ending with 1890 there were 60 of these schools established, although at present the total number of medical schools appears to be only 140, which is 1 for every 146,150 inhabitants. New York State, with 6,000,000 population, has 14 medical schools, or 1 for every 428,418; Missouri, with 2,679,184 population, has 13, or 1 for every 205,991; and Ohio, with 3,672,316 population, has 19, or 1 for every 193,249. In other countries medical schools increase less rapidly than population. In Germany and Great Britain there are 1 for about 1,750,000 inhabitants; in Brazil, 1 for every 7,001,167; and in Russia, but 1 for every 14,403,317. The reading of courses of lectures to students is no longer sufficient instruction, but the broad basis of modern medical education is the varied experience afforded by the hospitals and dispensaries of a large city, and this the small schools in thinly settled districts cannot provide.

Building on Sand.—Foundations in quicksand are now made by blowing dry cement into the sand. A pointed 1½ inch iron pipe, with several small holes at the lower end, is quickly sunk to a depth of 16 to 19 feet, then, as the pipe is slowly withdrawn, the cement is blown in by compressed air, passes through the small holes, and becomes thoroughly mixed with the sand. About one injection of cement to each square foot is necessary. The concrete formed by the sand and cement hardens slowly, requiring some months to attain its full strength. A Bremen engineer, F. Neukirch, reports a successful trial of this process for making watertight an iron cofferdam, and for providing a bed for a sewer laid in quicksand.

A French investigation shows that nearly all workers in tobacco factories have diminished power of vision, with a tendency to confuse red and green, the principal symptom being contraction of the pupils.

Flying in Germany.—Helmholtz long ago satisfied himself that the largest birds reach the limit of weight that can be carried in flight, even when the body is most favorably constituted for lightness and strength of wing, and that man is not likely ever to fly by his own power. But the experiments of O. Lilienthal at Steglitz, near Berlin, are at least interesting, and are thought to suggest a fine sport, if not the road to flying. The experimenter suspends himself in slightly curved wings, resembling a huge fan and about 15 yards in area, then, on a slight decline of 10 or 15 degrees, takes a sharp run of four or five steps against the wind, jumps into the air, and slides down over a distance of about 250 yards. By shifting his position, he can give the wing surface any inclination, and to a certain extent can quicken or slacken the movement, and change the direction.

Microbe-Destroyers in Rivers.—A student at the University of Munich, D. Harvey Atfield, has proven that the low forms of animal life which abound in rivers are exceedingly active in destroying bacteria, and purifying the water. One specimen of water contained 3,000,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter when infusoria were introduced, and 10 days afterward the number was reduced to 12,000. In another specimen of water, similarly placed, without the infusoria, the number of bacteria increased from 500 per cubic centimeter to 121,500.

It is estimated that in 1894—the year of the latest returns—the available coal supply of Japanese mines was 200,750,000 tons, which, reckoning the average annual increase in consumption at 13 per cent., is sufficient to last only 23 years and 10 months.

BILL NYE WRITES ABOUT MR. PULLMAN AND HIS CARS.

He Then Disposes of a Few Disputed Points of Etiquette With Graceful Savoir Faire and Replies Feelingly to Daisy Bell and Valerian and Kathleen Mavourneen.

[Copyright, 1894, by Edgar W. Nye.]

BUCK SHOALS, N. C., SUMMER OF '94.

"Philharmonic," Fresno, Cal., writes: 1. "Is it not a great wrong for the workingmen to unite against Mr. Pullman because he would not pay the same wages to his employees that he did last year? 2. Should one fold the napkin on leaving table? 3. Is it proper to accept a dime from a gentleman friend at church to put in the plate?"

1. Sir George Pullman has a right to reduce his wages to hired help, of course, as much as he desires, though he can hardly expect that the public will cheerfully go on paying $5 per wink for sleep in his cars if times get any worse. He can, of course, reduce wages in order to keep up his 8 per cent dividends, but the patron will hail with joy the new sleeping car company or any rival he may have which will put the price of repose where it will harmonize with that of other comforts.

As a matter of fact, we are paying war prices for slumber, and at the same time paying the salaries of Mr. Pullman's porters. No one can deny that for one moment. Mr. Pullman told us in June that he had been building refrigerator cars and freight cars at a loss of $12 to $24 per car, and so could not afford to pay fair wages, but he forgot to state that he had made $30,000,000 in 30 years out of his sucking works, while his whisk brooms have paid for his rolling stock and chambermaids' salaries.

We naturally notice first of all how we are individually affected by any great move, and naturally, as one of the great multitude, I hail with joy the prospect of better rates to the consumers of sleep.

Sir George has rights which capital always will have while the world stands, but those who have paid double prices for insomnia will not club together to buy Sir George a gold headed cane as a mark of esteem or to recoup him for his agonized hours by the seashore this summer.

It may be a small matter, but we are discussing a small matter when we refer to Mr. Pullman, but still there is no more reason why we should fee a porter on a Pullman car than that we should fee the engineer or the bridge gang. We generally ask no special service of the porter. I don't even care whether my head is toward the engine or vice versa, and I wear patent leather shoes, which I wipe off generally with the linen duster of some wealthy passenger. I go to bed when the porter tells me to do so and allow him to rest the upper berth on my high hat while he feels around up there for a gold watch. I also allow people to die in the berth above my own, and in every way try to make the company as little trouble as possible, and yet my shillings have gone for 30 years to help pay the salary of a man who is just as much Mr. P.'s servant as his gardener or his butler.

The truth is that you and I, Philharmonic, are paying Sir George Pullman's coachman every time we ride in his car. If Mr. Pullman sees fit to hire 10,000 coachmen while you and I only hire one, is that any more reason why George should pass the hat to pay off those servants? Is it any reason because Pullman uses a larger coach than you or I that we should feed and clothe that coachman? I trow not.

Regarding the people who help him build his caravans at Pullman, Ills., his conscience no doubt informs him every night when he retires that while he is putting liniment on his gout a great many hardworking people are very hungry at Pullman, Ills. I do not say that an American may not make a million dollars during a lifetime and do it honestly in the course of trade, and I believe that it has been done, but when it is made by reducing wages in order to hold up the size of dividends, even through such hard times as these, the capitalist must not ask for sympathy from the public. He will have to buy it when he needs any.

Mr. Pullman has succeeded during the last 30 years, no doubt, by a judicious use of the whisk broom, in knocking more dust out of the public than most any other business man, but he hasn't thrown so much of it into the eyes of the American people as he may imagine. I do not want to see him come to any harm, and I don't want to see him lose even a hand towel or the heel tap of a cake of soap, but while other business men are cheerfully accepting their share of loss during these dark, depressing times I think that he is as well prepared to stand a small reduction of wages as the rest of us.

2. You need not fold the napkin on leaving the table, according to the latest rulings in the fashionable world, unless you wish to take it home with you as a souvenir or to complete a set of your own. Folding the napkin rather implies that your hostess does not keep help and that you are in a delicate way helping her to do up her work.

3. It is proper to accept a nickel or any small piece of money from a gentleman friend to put in the plate at church, and to refuse it would be extremely rude and vulgar. Do not try to be too self reliant in this way and then err in some more important matter. I had a young woman acquaintance once who insisted on paying for a postage stamp that I gave her, and yet she borrowed a valuable book worth $35 20 years ago next September and has never returned it.

"Daisy Bell," Whatcom, Wash., says: "My father and mother approve of my marriage with a young man of whom I am passionately fond, but I have an older brother who objects bitterly to the match. Nearly six months ago my parents both gave their consent to my marriage to Walter. What should I do?"

Well, Daisy, if I stood in the position which you occupy, I would get Walter's consent and proceed to "play ball."

"Valerian," St. Augustine, Fla., writes, "What is the proper method for eating cheese?"

You should toy with it as though you did not care much for it, and then while your hostess is looking at some other guest slide it into your mouth. A very good way is to cut it on the plate and spread it on the bread. Much, of course, depends upon the variety of cheese used. Some cheese used lately in the best circles is passed to the guests cut in small squares, together with little individual silver clothespins to put on the nose. After you have received your cheese, however, the rule is to put it out of its misery as soon as possible.

Kathleen Mavourneen, Star Prairie, Wis., writes: "I have broken off my engagement with Sylvester, a young man who has kept Co. with me for going on two years. I presume it is partly my fault, but wish to refer it to you. He is rather a quick tempered man, and once when he did not think I was looking called my little dog to him, saying, 'Here, Tige; here, Tige,' and coaxing it to him, when all at once he hauled off, and saying, 'There, how do you like that, you fyste?' he kicked Tige in the stomach with all the force of his being.

"I was up stairs dressing at the time and saw all this below in the back yard from my chamber window, and, just as I was, I told him never to look at me again. He looked up a moment, with a twinkle in his eye, and said he guessed he didn't care to if that was the way I looked without my boughten hair.

"He then drifted slowly out of my life, knocking the poor little Mary Goulds galley west with his cane as he went. I afterward learned that he did it on purpose to startle me and not because he treasured ill feeling toward Tige.

"What should I do?

A FREE POLISH.

"I have a carnelian ring of his and a silver one that he made himself out of a 1/4 of a $. I was making a pair of yarn mitts to hang on the tree next winter for him. Would you finish the mitts for him and send back the rings? The latter I am afraid that I cannot get off, as my hands has grown a good deal this summer, for I have had to do the milking.

"I hate like everything to give him up, and yet you see what a hole I am in. I do not care to compromise myself with him, and yet I would rather have his love than a whole fair ground full of dogs. In fact, I have since that more than once kicked the measly old pup myself because he seems to stand betwixt me and Sylvester.

"What should I do?"

It is very difficult to come in between two estranged and icy hearts, both claiming that "there is nothing to arbitrate," while scalding tears from those cold hearts chase each other down youthful cheeks. How icy hearts can turn out scalding tears the reader may not understand, but it can be done if you get the right style of poetic license.

Kathleen, you must humiliate yourself, I fear, or the great chasm betwixt you and Sylvester will go on yawning more and more until at last some fine day you will read in The Weekly Blatter that Sylvester has chosen another. Of course he did wrong to kick your dog. You regarded it as a personal affront, but possibly he did it as an act of mere buoyancy of spirits.

I know a young man who is as handsome as a picture, with a voice that thrills one from main truck to keelson, so to speak, and with an eye like a pansy blossom, yet once he kicked his aged aunt in the chest and drank up all of her pudding brandy. In less than two years he was sorry about it and borrowed $8 of her. And so Sylvester may mean all right. He is impulsive. Such men often make the best of husbands. I would rather have such a one than to marry a man who would sulk over his victuals and get in my way in the kitchen while I was trying to do up my housework or argue doctrinal questions while the children licked all the dressing off a dollar's worth of new fly paper.

I'd rather have Sylvester, with his rashness and repentance, than a literary man who has to go out among the neighbors to get a fresh mess of fullsome praise every little while in order to sustain life.

The most unhappy wife I ever knew married a genius. It was the wedding of a sweet little duckling to a swooping eaglet. While he was an eaglet he and the duckling hunted grasshoppers together, but one day the young eagle saw with his keen and flashing eye a humming bird on the corner of a golden cloud, and he soared away. He was not at home for supper, and ever after that he turned up his Roman nose at the tame life of the ducklet. He began to notice the width of her yellow feet and to compare her parenthetical legs with the slender ankles of the thrush, and the gentle call of his domestic wife grated harshly on his ears after he had been soaring around in the thin air for a week listening to the lark and living on chamois chops among the snowy mantled Alps, while his plumage was patted with applause.

Katydid Engagements.

The girl in the white duck suit was sitting under a tree, with a book in her lap and her eyes directed toward a hammock across the lawn, in which sat the girl in a fluffy gown talking very earnestly to a pair of russet shoes and a pancake hat in a pink shirt. In due course this conference ended, and the couple separated, the girl in the fluffy gown coming over to the white duck.

"Well," inquires the white duck, "what have you been giving that young fellow?"

"My heart and my hand," laughed fluff.

"Not another engagement?"

Fluff tossed her head disdainfully.

"Yes," she said, "one of these katydid engagements."

"A katydid engagement?" queried the white duck curiously. "What's that?"

"Don't you know that yet?" gayed fluff.

"No. How should I?"

"Experience, my dear."

"But I have none."

"That's because you are not a genuine summer girl."

"Whatever it is, tell me what a katydid engagement is."

"You know," replied fluff seriously, "that six weeks after the katydid calls the frost comes, and that the frost nips the katydid and ends its brief career."

"Yes."

"Well," smiled fluff, "is it necessary for me to explain further?" And the white duck said, "Oh!" and let it go at that. Detroit Free Press.

THE NEW GAZETTE.

It is with great pleasure that we present to our readers to-day what is practically a new Gazette. The amount of work which such an enlargement represents can be appreciated fully only by a newspaper man. It has been made possible by the introduction of new machinery in our composing and press rooms, and by hard work on the part of the entire Gazette staff. Hereafter we propose to print an 8-page paper every day, and a 12-page paper on Sunday. The enlargement will enable us to give our readers the full telegraph report of the United Press—the best and most complete report to be had, and will bring the Gazette so far as the amount of news printed is concerned, to the level of the Denver papers. We can safely leave it to our readers whether we have already been on a level with them in other respects. It will enable us to present a full market report indispensable to every business man. Our mining department will be enlarged, and under the able and efficient management of Mr. Sachs this will be one of the leading features of the paper. Special arrangements have also been made for the best and freshest news from Cripple Creek, and hereafter we shall have more and better news from the great gold camp than any other paper in the State.

The local department, in charge of Mr. H. S. Rogers, has been so good that an improvement in the quality of it would be very difficult but we shall have more room for special features, such as the account of the new coliseum building which we print to-day. The first duty of every good newspaper is to its own town, and the most important news it can print is the local news. This The Gazette has always recognized but it will be our endeavor to make the local department better than ever.

The editorial comments of a good newspaper should be a strong feature of it. We have tried to make them so in The Gazette. The editorial is what gives to the paper its distinctive tone. Whatever else may be said of this paper, it cannot be said that its editorials have been colorless, or wanting in decision or in frankness.

The literary department—which by the way is the only one of the kind in the State—we regard as a valuable feature, and shall endeavor to keep it up to as high a standard as possible, by giving original reviews of new books, literary notes of interest, and selections from a very wide range of literary papers and periodicals.

In short, the new Gazette will be a fully-equipped modern newspaper. The encouragement we have had already, both from readers and from advertisers leads us to believe that our enterprise is appreciated, and that we shall have the hearty support of our citizens in making it a complete success in every sense of the word.

A STUPID MISTAKE.

The action of the Arapahoe county central committee in excluding the women members from full membership in the party was not only unjust it was stupid. The Republican women in Arapahoe county have been doing first rate work already, and they will keep right on doing it, regardless of the decision of the committee. In fact, we believe they have been doing much better work than the male public members of the committee, and if the convention should have to make a choice between the two it might very well recognize the feminine committee as the regular organization and compel the men to join it if they want to sit in the committee.

So far as we know, that is the only county in the State in which any contest of the sort has arisen. In the other counties the men have been glad of the help of the women and have cordially welcomed them to full membership. In this county, some of the very best and most effective work that has been done so far has been done by women, and we are glad to accord to them equal rights in every respect.

The small souled politicians in Denver who are afraid to share any of their authority with the women will have to come down very soon. Arapahoe county politics are going to be on a different and higher plane hereafter, and the sooner that fact is recognized by everybody, the better it will be for the Republican party in that county and in the State at large.

THE CONVENTION CITY.

Although many of our citizens have taken hold so earnestly in the matter of building the coliseum we doubt whether any one has yet measured the influence that building is likely to have on the growth and development of the city and its future prosperity.

We have had a striking illustration this summer of the willingness of organizations of all sorts to hold their national conventions in the Rocky Mountain region. Denver has had almost a continuous series of conventions since the month of May, and they have added greatly to the income of that city this summer. And yet Denver has not a tithe of the attractions that we can offer, as soon as we have a building large enough to seat the number of people who gather at such meetings.

This is the ideal convention city. Always cool and comfortable in summer, delightful in winter, and superb in the fall, our climate must be a great attraction to any body of persons who wish to insure good weather for the holding of their gatherings. Our hotel accommodations, including Manitou of course for our neighbor will have a large share in our coming convention prosperity—are ample for any number of people who may choose to come. The attractions by which we are surrounded, within easy reach, in the way of scenery, are unequalled by those of any other place in the known world. In ease of access, Colorado Springs will compare favorably with any city in the country. Our facilities for transportation, already excellent, can be extended easily to meet any demand that may be made upon them. Our summer attractions—the Casino, the Sunflower parade, and the various sports offered at the Country club, for instance, are full of interest to visitors. In short, we have here what the circus posters call "an unparalleled aggregation of unrivalled attractions." All that we need to do now is to let the people know what the city is like, and what a marvelously good place it is for conventions, and the coliseum will be in use all summer and part of the rest of the year.

This is an age of organizations. Everybody who gets an idea in his head straightway goes to work and recruits some followers and organizes them into a society, and when the society has grown a little it must have its annual convention. There is an increasing number of people who take their summer vacations by making trips to some convention of this sort, and because they take their vacations in this way, they rather prefer going some distance from home, to some place where the attractions are great, and which they would like to visit anyhow, irrespective of the convention. We believe that a larger number every year of such gatherings can be secured for the West, if proper effort is put forth. There is nobody who knows anything, between here and Passamaquoddy bay who would not be glad to come to the Pike's Peak region for a little visit at least, and the bringing of conventions here will insure such railway rates as will enable a great many people to come who otherwise could not afford it.

But Colorado Springs can become, not only a convention city for the whole country, and attract people from a great distance to see the varied wonders of Colorado it can become, and ought to become, the especial convention city of the State. It is almost in the center of the State, geographically. All the railways in the State either run directly through here or connect directly for this place. It is altogether the most attractive city in the State, the one with the most beautiful surroundings, the most beautiful streets and houses and outside appearance generally. It has the best weather of any place in the State. In connection with Manitou, it has the best hotel facilities. There is no reason, now that we have a building big enough to hold a political convention, why we should not get the majority of such conventions, and most of the other meetings of State bodies besides.

It is not enough, however, to have the attractions and accommodations, we must let people know about them, and use all the effort we can put forth to spread the idea that this is the convention city. Every citizen of this town should be a self-appointed missionary. Every member of any organization which holds conventions or large meetings of any sort should labor with his fellow members to convince them that this is the best place for their meetings. Somebody said after Sunflower day that when Colorado Springs really got to work and hustled she could beat any other place on earth. We guess that is so. Now let us all get to work and hustle for the convention and keep hustling.

To-morrow will be celebrated all over the United States as Labor Day. It will be a general holiday, and will be celebrated by many of the labor organizations with parades. In this city, we believe no extensive preparations have been made, but the day will be none the less enjoyed and appreciated. There is no place in the world where a holiday can be better enjoyed with the means of diversion always at hand, and no labor organizations anywhere that are more capable of enjoying such a day in the best way. We congratulate the laboring men of this city that their holiday is not, as is the case in so many places, an enforced one, and that the prospect for steady work at good wages is better in this city than in any other place we know of anywhere.

On another page of this paper will be found the official announcement of the lecture course of the Rocky Mountain Lyceum bureau for the coming season. This course of lectures will add very greatly to the attractions of our city during the winter months and we congratulate Manager Dickey in advance on the abundant success which his efforts will undoubtedly meet with.

Is there another city in the United States which can present such an evidence of growth and prosperity in these hard times as Colorado Springs gives today in the enlargement and improvement of its leading newspaper?

The Populist politicians are going to celebrate Labor Day by putting in some of the hardest work they ever did at the Pueblo convention. There will be some interesting reading in Tuesday morning's Gazette.

Those who were registered and failed to vote at the spring election can have their names retained on the registration list by calling in person at the County Commissioners' office any day this week.

If every Republican will but take a personal interest in looking after and registering other Republicans, the cost of registration will be greatly reduced.

Allen Agitators.

The public press has stated a very significant fact in connection with some of the recent riots, and it is one pregnant with grave and far-reaching considerations. It was announced that in some instances the mob of rioters who committed gross outrages was composed entirely of foreigners, none of whom could speak our language. There has been of late a strong conviction growing up among thinking men of both of the great political parties in the country that our immigration and naturalization laws were too lax, and that the United States were becoming the dumping-ground of the worst elements of foreign population. While this feeling is quite widely entertained by many of all shades of political opinion, neither party has had the courage to grapple with this question nor to take action to avert the danger which threatens our institutions by the unrestricted influx of peoples ignorant of our system of government, entertaining in many cases hostility to all forms of government, and who driven from their native lands, come hither as communists and anarchists. Immigrants of this class have proved a most pernicious contribution to our citizenship, and they have been in many, if not in most, cases responsible for the riotous outbreaks which have inflicted such incalculable injury on the country. Of course no reflection is meant on those honest immigrants who have linked their destiny with ours and who by their labor and their character have done so much to promote the best interests of the country; but it seems to me that our land should no longer be the refuge of the scum of all Europe, and that every man who makes this his home, whatever his nationality may be, should while holding his fatherland in tender memory, become at heart an American citizen with all his hopes, all his aspirations, all his patriotism centered in the land of his adoption. Our country will then be peopled and governed by true and loyal American citizens, native and adopted, and a homogeneous people will work in harmony to build up and to honor the land of their choice.—(From "The Lesson of the Recent Strikes" by the Hon. Wade Hampton, United States Commissioner of Railroads, in North American Review for August.

Troubles That Never Came.

Some one has said, "I have been surrounded by troubles all my life long, but there is a curious thing about them—nine-tenths of them never happened." quotes Mrs. Van Koert Schuyler in an earnest plea to women on "Living Beyond Their Strength" in the September Ladies' Home Journal.

I once heard of a lady who wrote down in order the particular fears and anxieties which were harrassing her, inclosed the paper and sealed it hoping by this kind of mechanical contrivance to be enabled in some sort to dismiss the subject from her mind. The paper was put away and forgotten. Several months later it came to light, when she found that not one of the fears therein set down had been realized and the difficulties had all been smoothed away before she came to the time for their solution.

A rare occurrence was recently celebrated in a small English town—the arrival at the age of 21 of three children of one birth. It is very seldom that triplets all reach maturity, but one case is said to be on record in which quadruplets—one female and three males—were born alive, and were all reared.
